MONTHLY UPDATE

The positive stock market performance we saw in April continued into May, albeit with wide variations between different markets. In particular, American growth companies rose while European value companies fell. Exchange rate movements also remained large, with a further strengthening of the US dollar and a major recovery of the Swedish krona from its weak performance in April. Depending on the currency, there were significant differences in returns during the month with the world index unchanged in USD, and up by 0.5 percent in SEK, while in EUR it saw an increase of more than 3 percent.

With the close of the first-quarter earnings season for most major corporations, the market's focus turned to macro events. Economic data and political events, especially in Europe, came to play a large role in investors' perception of markets during the month. The long-awaited meeting between President Trump and North Korea's Kim Jong-Un, which after its first announcement was cancelled and then rescheduled for June 12, attracted plenty of interest. Meanwhile developments in Europe were brought into even sharper focus. In mid-May, the winners of the Italian elections, the Five Star Movement and Lega Nord, nominated eurosceptic Paolo Savona as finance minister. The news was received with great concern by the financial markets and Italian interest rates rose sharply while the Milan Stock Exchange fell.

At the same time, the conservative prime minister of Spain, Mariano Rajoy, was forced to resign following corruption scandals within his party, the Partido Popular. This had a negative impact on Spanish interest rates and equities. Currency turmoil in Turkey, where Spanish banks are major lenders, fueled the unrest. Even Latin America, with yet another currency crisis in Argentina and a massive transportation strike in Brazil, adversely affected investors' willingness to take risks.

Towards the end of May, the Trump administration made a statement that the steel and aluminum tariffs originally announced in March despite negotiations would be imposed starting in June, renewing fears of an escalating trade war.

All in all, this led to widespread concern over economic developments in Europe and Latin America, with massive outflows of capital from these regions to the benefit of reallocation to the United States. Sector-wise, the upside was dominated by technology, which rose worldwide by approximately 7 percent, while banks fell by just over 3 percent. Healthcare was up approximately 4 percent.

FUND PERFORMANCE

Measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR), the fund rose by 6.26 percent in May.

Despite significant setbacks for two of the fund's holdings, the fund showed strong performance during the month. The Trump administration's launch of initiatives to improve healthcare and the availability of drugs for American patients was well received by the financial markets. The healthcare sector, led by biotechnology, reacted with considerable gains of 4.1 percent (MSCI World HC) and 8.5 percent (NBI). Among the month's top contributors were Horizon Pharma, Abiomed and Intra Cellular Therapies. The worst contributors were Faron Pharmaceuticals, Esperion Therapeutics and Genmab.

Horizon Pharma, a US specialty pharma company, has systematically shifted its focus over the past year from primary care drugs to specialty drugs. Its first-quarter interim report released in May confirmed that this strategy has been successful. Since hitting a low in May of last year, its share price has gone up nearly 70 percent.

Abiomed is a US medical technology company. The company's product Impella, a minimally invasive cardiac pump, is a world leader in improving blood circulation when the patient's own cardiac function is reduced for various reasons. The technology behind Impella is unique and its area of application is comprehensive, which means a continued source of untapped growth potential for the product. A strong interim report in which the company exhibited strong sales growth had a highly positive impact on its share price, which has doubled in value so far this year. Abiomed is thus the fund's top contributor since the start of the year.

The US research company Intra-Cellular Therapies is expected in the near future to apply for FDA approval for its drug candidate lumateperone for the treatment of schizophrenia. The effects of lumateperone are also being studied in the indication of bipolar depression, and results from a phase III trial in this indication are expected during the second half of 2018. The positive outlook for lumateperone has led to positive share price performance in recent weeks.

Faron Pharmaceuticals is a Finnish research company. The company's drug candidate Traumakine was developed to treat so-called shock lung, an acute and life-threatening condition. It had a major setback in May because results from a phase III trial showed that the product had no clinical effect. Following the negative trial results, the share price fell by nearly 90 percent. The company is currently evaluating possible reasons for the major discrepancies in results compared with its phase II trials.

Esperion Therapeutics is a US research company that is developing a new drug in tablet form for the treatment of hypercholesterolemia. Results from two phase III trials were presented during the period. The results confirmed the effect on lowering blood fat seen in previous trials, but an imbalance in the side-effect profile compared with the control group created uncertainty among investors regarding the likelihood of getting the product approved by the authorities. This, in turn, put pressure on the valuation of the company, which saw its share price nearly halved during the period.

Genmab is a Danish biotech company that develops antibodies for the treatment of cancer and inflammatory diseases. The company's product Darzalex is approved for the treatment of the blood cancer multiple myeloma. Together with its partner Janssen Biotech, Genmab is also evaluating the product in several different tumor types as well as in a combination therapy with so-called PD-1 inhibitors. In May, Genmab announced that it would discontinue a phase I/II trial of Darzalex in combination with Roche's Tecentrique for the treatment of lung cancer because they did not observe any increased effect but rather a slight trend towards increased mortality in patients treated with the combination and their share price dropped sharply.

FORECAST

The White House press conference on prescription drug prices on May 11 revealed itself to be the starting point for a better stock market mood for the healthcare sector in general, and for biotechnology in particular. The measures proposed were well in line with what was presented in the Trump administration's budget proposal earlier this year, and expectations were set that similar proposals would be made going forward. Several of the proposals are industry-friendly by their very nature, such as the improvement of prescription drug insurance. The positive reaction was, however, due mainly to the absence of any unexpected proposals for price controls or central contracts. So, for the moment, the industry can catch its breath, submit comments in an upcoming consultation and then wait for the details of the new regulations from the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS). Further investigations will take place, and the current administration might also try to influence Congress to legislate on certain issues. Many of these efforts, of course, are planned for the future. Given that all of this work will take time to investigate and implement, and that it is based on successive changes to the current structures, the sector looks increasingly attractive relative to other sectors, not least in light of potentially weaker economic development over the course of 2019. ■
