Monthly update

January's strong recovery on world stock markets continued into February, although somewhat less strongly, but could again be characterized as broad. All regions and sectors saw gains. 2018, which turned out to be the worst year for the stock market since the major financial crisis ten years ago, was marked by continued investor interest in growth sectors, especially in the United States. At the same time, investors' interest in other regions decreased, particularly for the value companies. This year's events thus far suggest that interest in markets outside the United States has risen sharply from last year even though information technology (IT) and NASDAQ are once again leading the market.

Several factors affected February's positive performance. A relatively good reporting season, less concern over political complications and restrained central banks all played part in a continued healthy investment climate. Positive progress was seen in the trade negotiations between the United States and China, leading President Trump to announce a delay of the tariff deadline. The messy process around Brexit also seemed to make some progress, and the EU opened the door for extending negotiations until after March 29. The US-North Korea summit which took place in Hanoi late in the month failed to produce concrete results but did not dampen investors' risk appetite.

Macroeconomic indicators also saw some bright spots in February, especially in those countries that ended 2018 on a weak note. In France, support for the Yellow Vests has waned and the effects of their demonstrations have weakened. Some improvements were seen in Germany after it experienced a major slowdown last autumn largely as a result of new testing rules for light-duty vehicles (WLTP). Additionally, China is now introducing considerable stimulus measures.

Overall, the world index was up 2.6 percent in February, measured in euros. All sectors saw gains, with IT and industrial companies leading the pack while consumer discretionary and healthcare companies rose relatively less. Regionally China, Europe and the United States topped the rankings, with Japan trailing behind.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund rose 2.5 percent during the period, measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR), and 3.7 percent measured in RC1 (SEK). Measured in euros, the broad healthcare index (MSCI HC) rose 2.6 percent. With a gain of 5.3 percent, medical technology (S&P HC Equipment & Supplies) was the sector which delivered the strongest performance during the month. Pharmaceuticals (MSCI Pharma) and biotechnology (NBI) rose by 4.3 and 3.3 percent, respectively, while Services (MSCI HC Services) decreased by 5.3 percent.

The month's best contributors to the fund were Horizon Pharma and Spark Therapeutics. The worst contributors were Diplomat Pharmacy and Cigna.

Horizon Pharma is a US specialty pharma company focusing on rare diseases. At the end of the month, the company presented highly promising phase 3 results for its IGF-1R inhibitor teprotumumab, a drug candidate for the treatment of thyroid eye disease (TED) which is caused by an overproduction of the thyroid hormone. There are no effective treatment methods today apart from surgery and the sales potential for teprotumumab is therefore considered to be significant. The stock rose sharply following the news.

Spark Therapeutics is a US biotechnology company specialized in the development of gene therapies such as hemophilia A. During the month Roche made an offer to acquire Spark at a value of 4.3 billion dollars, which corresponded to a premium of 122 percent. The acquisition gives Roche access to Spark's knowledge and expertise in gene therapy, and in particular to the company's development programme for hemophilia A.

Diplomat is the largest independent US pharmacy chain focusing on specialty medicines. The company also operates a pharmacy benefit manager (PBM) business that offers services to health insurance providers for the procurement of drugs and their management. The share price fell sharply when the company announced that it was withdrawing its previously communicated earnings guidance for the full year 2019. The increased competitive environment for both of the company's businesses has created greater challenges than previously anticipated, which has translated into poorer growth prospects for the company.

All share prices of US health insurance companies fell as the result of a proposed transition to a state-run health insurance scheme, with Cigna taking the lead. The proposed Medicare for All scheme was presented by the Democrats in February. Under the proposal, a government-funded program would replace not only private health insurance but also state-funded Medicare and Medicaid. The cost has been estimated at more than 30 trillion (!) dollars over a ten-year period. The likelihood that the proposal will be passed is minimal for several reasons which include the increased tax burden, low voter support (according to opinion polls that before polling explain the proposal details), and a low probability of achieving the qualified senate majority necessary for pushing through such legislation.

OUTLOOK

Most people, including ourselves, have been surprised both by the sharp decline we saw in the late autumn as well as the remarkably strong and rapid recovery at the beginning of 2019. We are likely to see some consolidation of the gains generated in January and February, followed by continued gains throughout the rest of the year. History tells us that a strong start to the year speaks for a strong year. However, geopolitical risks (Brexit, US-China trade agreements) are still with us, so we are holding off a possible increase in net exposure, which this year on average has been below the levels of last year.

We are pleased to note that interest in biotechnology has returned in full force. The more secure companies in the service sector are currently the fund's worst performing subsector. The market is currently risk-on due to low, stable interest rates, flexible central banks and continued economic expansion (even if the level could be better, especially in Europe), as well as the geopolitical risks which appear to be manageable. The healthcare sector is still faring well, and we believe that the only thing which can really trouble global investors in the sector is the US election in 2020. However, there are no indications today that a major reform will achieve a majority even if the Democrats win the next election. That would require a Democratic victory for the presidency, democratic victories in both chambers of congress plus a realistic proposal that would be acceptable by a senate supermajority.
