Monthly update

The global stock market performance in March turned out to be considerably more volatile than the first two months of the year. Despite a solid earnings season, investors focused on lower interest rates and concerns over economic developments. However, the month ended on a positive note, and performance for the first quarter as a whole was the strongest in ten years. The market thus in principle recovered nearly all of its heavy losses from the fourth quarter of 2018.

Central banks, political developments and economic signals were the focus of investor interest during the month. At its meeting in March, the US Federal Reserve Bank maintained its dovish stance, citing a slowdown in the economy and falling inflationary pressures. The European Central Bank (ECB) too expressed a negative view on growth and falling inflation. The initial reactions of the stock markets were negative reflecting rising economic concerns. But the positive effects of lower interest rates outweighed concerns, which bolstered the market. This did not, however, apply to the banking sector, which would have benefitted from normalized or higher interest rates.

The political complications that have long dominated news feeds – US-China and Brexit – evolved in different directions. Thus, expectations of successful trade talks between the United States and China grew, even though no agreement was reached in March. On the other hand, worries intensified that Britain was risking a withdrawal from the EU (Brexit) without an agreement. Theresa May's attempt to push the negotiated agreement through Parliament was voted down several times. However, the original time limit of 29 March was extended by the EU to 12 April. But at the time of writing, the chances of an agreement getting passed appear to be highly unlikely.

Overall the world index rose by 2.5 percent in March, measured in euros. Most sectors saw gains, with information technology and consumer staples leading the pack, while banks saw declines. Virtually all regions rose, with the United States and China in the lead, while Europe fell.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund decreased by 1.4 percent during the period, measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR), and decreased by 2.4 percent measured in RC1 (SEK). Measured in euros, a broad healthcare index (MSCI HC) rose by 2.3 percent.

The month's best contributors to the fund were Immunomedics and Neurocrine Biosciences. The worst contributors were Nektar Therapeutics and Abiomed.

Immunomedics is a US biotechnology company that develops antibody-based products for the targeted treatment of cancer, and also for autoimmune diseases. The company's most advanced drug candidate, sacituzumab govitecan, has shown highly promising data for the treatment of refractory, metastatic triple-negative breast cancer, which today lacks adequate treatment options. The company suffered a setback earlier this year when the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), during its evaluation of the drug, requested further information on the manufacturing process. This meant a delay in the product's approval, which resulted in negative share price performance. Since then, however, investor confidence in the product and the company has been reinforced, which resulted in strong share price performance in March.

The US biotechnology company Neurocrine Biosciences specializes in diseases of the central nervous system and in endocrinological diseases. Neurocrine's primary source of revenue is Ingrezza, which is approved for the treatment of tardive dyskinesia (involuntary movements). During the month, the company also presented positive phase II data for its drug candidate for the treatment of congenital adrenal hyperplasia (CAH) in patients who have not had sufficiently positive outcomes from treatment with steroids. This news led to a positive reaction in the share price. Neurocrine is also considered to be a potential takeover candidate. Neurocrine stock was thus positively impacted when Biogen discontinued its much-discussed Alzheimer's study due to lack of efficacy. Biogen is now in great need of renewing its product portfolio, leading to speculation that the company will carry out one or more acquisitions.

Nektar Therapeutics' share price performance was weak in March. It is a US biotechnology company that has a unique platform in chemistry and pharmacology, with potential for broad use. Nektar is mainly recognized for its research portfolio in immuno-oncology, an attractive area within the pharmaceutical industry. The introduction of immunotherapies which activate the patient's immune system to attack tumours has been shown to have good outcomes for a small proportion of patients (approximately 30 percent). The pharmaceutical industry, including Nektar, is now striving to develop combination therapies to enable more patients to respond to such treatment. The sales potential for an effective combination is significant, which many companies find highly attractive. This has given rise to a broad range of new potential drugs that are currently in clinical development. Nektar's weak share price performance in March can thus be explained by increased activity in this field, where the stock market perceived the competitive situation as more challenging.

The US medical technology company Abiomed was also one of the month's worst contributors. The company's product Impella, a minimally invasive cardiac pump, is world leading in improving blood circulation when a patient's cardiac function is impaired for various reasons. The technology behind Impella is unique and the application area extensive. This means that there is a continued large untapped growth potential for the product. Over a five-year period, the share price has multiplied. However, during March, the stock fell due to increased concerns about future competition.

OUTLOOK

A very strong quarter followed on the heels of a very weak one. So, we are back to square one. The weakening of the world economy is a fact, yet there remains broad optimism about the possibility of avoiding a recession. We share that view. We see clear signs that cyclical and so-called value stocks are looking promising, as too does the financial sector. This could be unfavorable for the healthcare sector, which could be looking at net selling in favour of other sectors that appear to have better momentum. Hopefully, we can expect a gradual increase in risk appetite as the business cycle stabilizes and improves, which would benefit our small and medium-sized companies as well as the biotechnology sector as a whole.

We expect a further broadening and strengthening of the stock market, regardless of the outcome of Brexit. A "hard" Brexit might lead to an initial drop in the equity market, most likely followed by rising share prices resulting from monetary policy as well as fiscal stimulus measures. An "agreed" Brexit should trigger a relief rally. Moreover, a "delay" of the exit should also be received reasonably well, since the market would interpret this as a prelude to a negotiated solution. Thus, all three scenarios for Brexit point to a stronger market. The biggest obstacle to a continued upswing is therefore the issues of global trade and the conditions of the global economy as a whole.

Exciting times await us. However, the external factors not explicitly related to the healthcare sector, and which cannot be predicted with precision, are significant, and we will therefore maintain the risk profile of the fund at current levels. In the meantime, the underlying sector trends remain strong.
