Monthly update

Following the volatile performance of world stock markets in March, investor risk appetite increased significantly in April. As a result of the strong earnings reports, better economic data and cautious central banks during the month of April, share prices have now picked up considerably since the beginning of the year. The only real exception was healthcare stocks, especially in the United States, which fell sharply during the middle of the month after US Democratic senator Bernie Sanders proposed a reform that would, in theory, lead to profit restrictions for the sector. The proposed reform would entail a ban on private health insurance if a publicly-funded health insurance plan covering all Americans were to be introduced. The 'nationalization' of healthcare would also mean far worse bargaining power for the sector as a whole. We and many others, however, believe that the likelihood of it being realized is very low.

The month's gains should be viewed against the backdrop of the very weak 2018. The last month of 2018 proved to be the worst December since 1931, and many investors chose - or were forced - to reduce their exposure to the equity markets. The turnover of the strong January and February trading months was thus relatively low. In reality, in terms of economic development and corporate earnings, investors returned to the markets in April.

The political concerns that dominated news feeds in March took a back seat in April. This was particularly true of Brexit, which no longer attracted any significant interest after the EU extended the deadline. Neither did the trade negotiations between the United States and China have any major impact on investors' risk appetite, despite the stated progress made. The same was true for US-North Korea relations, which have deteriorated since the failed summit in Hanoi, and the final report by special counsel Robert Muller on President Trump's alleged ties with Russia.

Overall the world index rose by 3.2 percent in March, measured in euros. With the exception of healthcare shares, all sectors noted gains, with information technology and banks at the head of the pack. All regions rose, with Europe unexpectedly in the lead, followed by the United States with China lagging.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund decreased by 6.0 percent, measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR), and decreased by 3.9 percent measured in its RC1 class (SEK). A broad healthcare index, MSCI HC, decreased by 2.5 percent measured in euros.

The month's best contributors to the fund were HCA Healthcare and Sangamo Therapeutics. The worst contributors were LivaNova and Neurocrine Biosciences.

HCA, the United States' largest private hospital chain, was one of April's top contributors. The company focuses its operations on regions with good economic growth. Its share price recovered during the latter part of the period when the company delivered its interim report, which beat market expectations on higher sales growth as well as improved margins. This also resulted in a raised profit outlook for the rest of the year.

Sangamo is a US biotechnology company that develops new drugs with a focus on gene therapies. The company has several ongoing development projects in blood diseases such as hemophilia, beta thalassemia and sickle cell disease. Following a weak share price trend in the first quarter, in early April the company presented promising, albeit early, clinical data from its hemophilia A program, which triggered a positive reaction in its share price.

The British medical technology company LivaNova was the month's worst contributor. The company has two business areas, Cardiovascular and Neuromodulation. Within Neuromodulation, the company has pioneered the development of VNS (Vagus Nerve Stimulation) therapy for patients who have developed drug-resistant epilepsy and treatment-resistant depression. In early April, the company pre-announced a weaker than expected quarter for both business areas which will have an impact on the rest of the year. In addition, the earnings trend will be negatively affected by a noticeable currency effect. Weaker prospects for growth led to a plummet in share price.

The US biotechnology company Neurocrine Biosciences was also a weak contributor. The company specializes in diseases of the central nervous system and in endocrinological disorders. Neurocrine's primary source of revenue is Ingrezza, which is approved for the treatment of tardive dyskinesia (involuntary movements). The fund's holdings in Neurocrine made it one of the best contributors in March. However, the company's share price, like the rest of the sector, was weak in April as a result of concerns about reforms to the US healthcare system. In addition, the interim report was met with limited enthusiasm. Although the company met market expectations on the first-quarter sales trends for Ingrezza, the share price reacted negatively since the market had hoped for even better results.

OUTLOOK

The sector rotation that took place in the stock market in April was one of the most powerful, in such a short space of time, for several decades. This was reflected in the relative performance of the healthcare sector against the equity market as a whole, negative by 5.7 percent in euros. In addition, the fund had several individual holdings that performed weakly. High exposure to the United States created further headwinds.

Despite this difficult stock market climate, we believe that the fund can recover in the coming months. We consider the likelihood of a radical overhaul of the funding and structure of US healthcare to be low. One example of how difficult it is to overhaul funding is that Congress has repeatedly postponed the so-called 'Cadillac tax,' which would limit, to a specified threshold, corporate tax deductions for health insurance. It should be very difficult to ban private health insurance considering that Congress is not able to limit the size of these deductions despite its previous decision to the contrary. However, winds from the left blowing through the Democratic Party are bringing an election campaign rhetoric that is curbing enthusiasm for investments in the healthcare sector. 'Medicare for All' could hypothetically imply a healthcare system similar to that of Canada or a European country. It would probably involve lower profits for insurance companies, hospitals and nearly all suppliers, at least in the long run. In the event of a new major healthcare reform after the US elections in 2020, the goal of extending coverage could much more readily be accomplished by extending ObamaCare, or possibly by expanding Medicare by offering individuals aged 55 to 65, for example, such insurance with special subsidies and tax breaks. An expansion of Medicaid for the poor may also gain acceptance among a majority in Congress.

Many alternative structural changes are possible, and most could largely be based on the current structure. These changes could benefit the sector's commercial stakeholders, even in the event of some additional price pressure. Any major reform would take at least two years to negotiate and legislate, and an additional few years to implement. We will most certainly be returning to this topic. Evolution is the watch word, not revolution; the American people are generally satisfied with their private health insurance plans, but see the need for healthcare to cover a greater share of the population, if not all.

We would like to stress that the healthcare sector is now one of the cheapest sectors, both in the United States and in the world. The sector has shown continued strong and profitable growth, and we see that the downturn in April has presented the long-term investor an interesting buying opportunity. Volatility due to the election campaign in the United States, however, along with continued sector rotation resulting from the recovery of the world economy, may of course continue.
