Monthly update

July is one of the year's four major months in the earnings season. This is when corporate performance lies at the heart of investor interest, while political events, macroeconomics and central banks tend to take more of a back seat. On the whole, this year was no different but with one major exception: the expected interest rate cut from the US central bank, the Federal Reserve, at the end of the month.

The earnings season has been relatively good so far with earnings in line with or better than expectations, not least in the United States, where several of the biggest corporations delivered a positive surprise including Microsoft and JP Morgan. Europe too showed better-than-expected figures, including some of the major banks. The outlook was consistently cautious, especially regarding industrial companies, and the general concerns over the negative consequences of trade tensions and a slowdown in demand dampened the tone.

As expected, the Federal Reserve lowered its benchmark rate by a quarter-percentage point at its end-of-the-month meeting. This was in line with market expectations. At the same time, the Federal Reserve expressed some hesitancy about the extent and the timing of the next cut. As a result, the announcement as a whole was perceived as being slightly hawkish. President Trump has long criticized Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell over the bank's failure to lower the rate fast enough and far enough, and this time was no exception. Among economists, however, reactions to the interest rate cut have been mixed. Several have cited strong economic development, including record-low unemployment, as the main reason for the Federal Reserve's decision to hold off on further cuts.

In other news, Brexit returned to the spotlight when Boris Johnson was elected new leader of the Tories and thus became the prime minister of the United Kingdom. His promise that the United Kingdom will leave the EU on October 31, with or without a deal, fueled concerns over the process and sent the value of the British pound down. Tensions with Iran intensified. First the British seized an Iranian tanker near to Gibraltar, and then Iran struck back by seizing a UK-flagged (but Swedish-owned) ship in the Strait of Hormuz. However, the effects on oil prices proved to be limited.

Overall, the world index measured in Euros was up 2.3 percent in July. Almost all sectors saw gains, with information technology and consumer goods at the top while energy and commodities languished at the bottom. All regions rose, too, with the United States as the best-in-class winner followed by Japan, while Europe performed significantly less well. However, it should be noted that strong currency fluctuations had a major impact on returns and the month ended virtually unchanged for investors with USD as their base currency.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased by 3.1 percent in July, calculated in the fund's main share class IC1 (EUR), and increased by 4.1 percent in RC1 (SEK). Measured in euros, a broad healthcare index (MSCI HC) increased by 0.9 percent.

The month's best contributors to the fund were Novocure and Galapagos. The worst contributors were Nektar Therapeutics and Intra-Cellular Therapies.

Novocure is a US medical device company that has developed a new technology for the treatment of cancer. The company's product, Optune, which uses electric fields to disrupt cell division in tumors, is currently approved for the treatment of glioblastoma (an aggressive form of brain cancer). The product's recent approval for the treatment of mesothelioma, and expectations around the upcoming late-stage results for additional indications (pancreatic, lung and ovarian cancers), as well as greater expectations for a broader potential of the company's technology, have been important drivers behind the stock's performance in 2019. In July, the share price continued to increase thanks to a strong interim report and a positive reimbursement decision from the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) for Optune. Novocure thus once again emerged as the fund's best contributor the past month, cementing its position as the fund's best contributor over the first seven months of the year.

Galapagos is a Belgian biotechnology company specializing in the development of small-molecule drugs. The company's most advanced development project involves filgotinib, a so-called JAK inhibitor, for the treatment of inflammatory diseases. It is expected to receive US FDA approval later this year. Galapagos previously signed a partnership agreement with Gilead for the commercialization of filgotinib. The middle of the month saw a deepening of ties between the two companies. In addition to a significant upfront payment of 3.95 billion US dollars, Gilead increased its ownership in Galapagos from 12.3 percent to 22 percent through an equity investment worth 1.1 billion US dollars. In return, Gilead gets the right to commercialize all Galapagos' research outside the EU during a 10-year period. Galapagos stock shot up as a result of the advantageous deal with Gilead.

Nektar Therapeutics performed weakly in July, and its contribution to the fund was the month's worst. The company has a unique platform in medical chemistry and pharmacology with broad use potential. Nektar is mainly known for its research portfolio in immuno-oncology, where the company is striving to develop effective combination therapies. It has also used its research platform to develop an innovative analgesic medicine that regulates opioid receptors without creating the dependence that usually arises from the use of morphine-like drugs. At the end of the period, the FDA announced that it was extending the review period for Nektar's drugs. The FDA referred to the ongoing investigations as a consequence of the opioid crisis that has hit the US market following overconsumption of morphine-like painkillers.

Intra-Cellular Therapies is a US pharmaceutical company that develops innovative drugs for the treatment of central nervous system (CNS) disorders. Lumateperone targets three different neurotransmitters that are all involved in mental illnesses and therefore show potential in several indications. The company is waiting for approval from the FDA on its drug application for the treatment of schizophrenia.

Additionally, they are also conducting clinical studies into bipolar disorders, and depression related to dementia and Alzheimer's disease. The company suffered two setbacks during the month. Out of two bipolar disorder studies, they only succeeded in showing statistically significant efficacy in one of them. This is not uncommon within the CNS area, but created greater uncertainty about the drug's future potential. Secondly, at the end of the month, the FDA announced the cancellation of a planned advisory meeting. The review period may need to be extended for approving lumateperone for the treatment of schizophrenia after the FDA received the supplementary information it had requested. Together, these events caused the share price to plummet.

OUTLOOK

We are approaching the time of the year when the stock market often becomes weaker. On average, since the end of the Second World War, the period of August and September have been the weakest of the year. Geopolitics in a broad sense impacts markets, and it seems that the troubles that have persistently followed us have now been brought into focus. These include the Trump administration's focus on trade deficits, Britain's continuing desire to leave the EU, and the lack of democracy in countries like Russia, China and Iran. These crises seem to become more and more complex and intractable, and they are increasingly impacting global economies. Economic activity is possibly on the verge of deteriorating. And we can probably expect more volatility ahead, as the market tries to adjust to the changing conditions. As a result of all of this, we chose to lower the fund's net exposure in July.

The healthcare sector can cope with bad times better than many other sectors, which could benefit the fund in relative terms. However, our fairly high level of holdings of small and medium-sized companies could counteract such a development, despite the favorable valuations of these companies, since this part of the stock market is usually more volatile.

Fundamentally, we hold an optimistic view of our sector. Our companies are meeting robust demand in a market with relatively stable conditions – despite the political rhetoric – and are benefitting from rapid research and technological advances. Attractive valuations point to continued great potential for healthy returns. The fund has outperformed a broad industry index by roughly 10 percent just this year, suggesting that we have found good diversification among companies that are highly regarded by the market. Going forward we will still strive to balance the significant risks of geopolitics with the sector's outstanding opportunities.
