Monthly update

After a weak start, world stock markets delivered positive performance during most of October. This was thanks to good quarterly reports, dovish central banks and reduced political risks. However, the gains tapered off towards the end of the month and the world index as a whole rose only marginally. The sharp reversal from growth companies to value companies that had marked September changed direction, and growth sectors such as healthcare and information technology were winners once again.

Trade delegations from the United States and China met, resulting in the announcement of a partial trade deal which the presidents of the two countries were expected to sign in November. The final days of the month, however, brought the news that China was questioning its prospects of reaching a comprehensive long-term trade deal with the United States. And, as far the rest of US politics was concerned, the Democrats continued their efforts to impeach President Trump over his dealings with Ukraine.

As expected, the US Federal Reserve lowered the benchmark interest rate for the third time this year at its meeting in late October. Yet they also announced their intention to wait and see how US economic data evolved before possibly making any further cuts. In Europe, former IMF managing director Christine Lagarde took up her role as head of the European Central Bank. It is widely assumed that she will continue the monetary policy of her predecessor, Mario Draghi. Like Draghi, she too is calling for fiscal stimulus measures.

In the United Kingdom, the ever-more unpredictable Brexit process continued. Boris Johnson succeeded in reaching a new agreement with EU leaders, only to have it voted down by the British Parliament. After an additional number of rounds, a general election will now be held in December and the EU has, once again, granted an extension. If Johnson wins, an orderly exit is possible. Some fear, however, that he risks meeting the same fate as his predecessor Theresa May, who called for new elections and lost her majority.

Overall, the world index measured in Euro rose by 0.4 percent in October. In contrast to September, when all sectors noted gains, the spread between the best and the worst sectors was wide. Healthcare and information technology noted significant gains, while consumer staples and energy fell. All major regions, however, were ahead with Japan in the lead, followed by Europe, while the United States and Hong Kong trailed.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The Two of the fund's holdings were subject to acquisitions in October. One of them was RA Pharmaceuticals, which proved to be one of the fund's best contributors. RA Pharmaceuticals is a US biotechnology company with a development portfolio for complement system diseases. Among other offerings, the company has developed the drug candidate zilucoplan in myasthenia gravis and other complement system disorders. Early in the month, UCB made a bid for the company worth 2.1 billion US dollars, representing a premium of 97 percent. Vertex is a US biotechnology company that is the market leader in treatments for cystic fibrosis (CF). CF is a rare genetic disorder that affects the body's mucous membranes. It's most distinctive clinical manifestation is reduced lung function and therefore impaired breathing. Vertex has a portfolio of drugs for treating CF, and their various combinations are currently standard treatments for patients worldwide. During the month, the company received approval for its triple combination therapy, Trikafta, for a broader CF patient group. The approval came earlier than expected, which means better growth prospects for next year. This resulted in strong stock performance during the month.

MacroGenics is a US biotechnology company specializing in cancer and advanced antibody technologies. The company's most advanced development project, margetuximab, is being developed for the treatment of HER2-positive breast cancer. The ongoing Phase 3 SOPHIA study compares margetuximab with the standard treatment trastuzumab, both in combination with chemotherapy. The SOPHIA study is the basis for the license application that the company intends to submit to the US FDA later this year. The company has demonstrated an improved progression-free survival rate, which is the primary efficacy measure that forms the basis of the application for approval. However, the interim overall survival data presented during the period indicated no improvement compared with the standard treatment. The news was negatively interpreted as it is now more difficult to assess the product's commercial potential. This sent the share price down in October.

Nektar Therapeutics has a unique platform in medical chemistry and pharmacology with broad use potential. Nektar is mainly known for its research portfolio in immuno-oncology, where the company strives to develop effective combination therapies. While a broader US biotechnology index (NBI) was up by approximately 8 percent in October, Nektar's share price trend was marked by continuing uncertainty surrounding its flagship project, bempeg, a pegylated IL-2 molecule that is combined with other immuno-oncology drugs, in addition to concerns about the progress of its collaboration with Bristol Myers Squibb. Without any real news, the share price continued to fall marginally in an otherwise positive market dynamic for the biotech sector.

OUTLOOK

After September's lackluster performance, October saw a rebound thanks to a particularly strong reporting period for the healthcare sector combined with an undeniably positive market sentiment. Biotechnology now appears to be back in the spotlight among broader equity funds, the so-called generalists. This renewed interest was bolstered by Biogen's share price, which surged on the news that the company would revive an Alzheimer's project after an analysis of more data from a previously disappointing clinical trial showed promising results after the data had matured. This served as a reminder to the market that the major risks in drug development could also open up large – even enormous – potential markets when clinical data is good.

We are now in wait-and-see mode. The legal process of declaring Obamacare incompatible with the US Constitution continues. A ruling from a court of appeals is expected any day but can, of course, be delayed. We are also waiting to see how the impeachment process against President Trump will alter the political landscape, on matters ranging from a potential drug price reform this year to how the probabilities of the different possible outcomes in the US election next autumn could be affected. We have to accept that volatility can still persist even though valuations are attractive. As usual we remain focused on high-quality growth companies in all sub-sectors in combination with compelling and innovative biotechnology research and development companies.

Share prices in our sector should have good prospects of rising within a year's time, unless US voters take a sharp left turn and choose a left-leaning Democrat for president combined with a Senate with a Democratic majority. We consider this probability to be small but not impossible. We look ahead to the future with confidence of attractive risk reward.
