Monthly update

The world's stock markets delivered positive performance in November as investor risk appetite rose thanks to less concern about the economy, continuing low interest rates and perceived stable political developments. Because of a somewhat stronger Swedish krona, market gains as measured in the euro and the dollar were one to two percentage points higher as compared to the krona. Growth sectors, such as information technology and healthcare, led the gains while so-called defensive sectors, such as consumer staples and utilities, were down.

As expected, the partial trade agreement between the United States and China announced in October was not signed. The tone between the parties was still reasonably good during the month, at least until the end of November, when the United States introduced legislation in support of the protest movement in Hong Kong. The unrest there persisted throughout most of the month, but eased somewhat after a local election revealed strong support for representatives from the pro-democracy protest movement. The developments caused investors to worry and, unlike most other markets, the Hong Kong Stock Exchange fell in November.

In Europe, the upcoming UK general election dominated news feeds. Although the Tory Party has a seemingly reassuring lead in the polls, many people are not daring to dismiss Jeremy Corbyn's Labour Party. Investors view a Labour victory as a major threat, and one that would also delay Brexit further.

On the whole, the economic data presented during the month were weakly positive relative to expectations, but did not change the picture of slowed growth. Immediately after the end of November, a weaker-than-expected purchasing managers' index in the United States also confirmed the slide in growth.

Overall, the world index measured in euros increased by 3.5 percent in November. Just like in October, the spread between the best and the worst sectors was wide. Healthcare and information technology continued to see significant gains, while consumer staples and utilities fell. Geographically the spread in performance was also wide, with the US market showing the best gains while Hong Kong lagged the market, recording a loss.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased 13.0 percent, measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR), and increased 10.6 percent measured in RC1 (SEK). The month's best contributors to the fund were Esperion Therapeutics and Novocure. The worst contributors were Aerie Pharmaceuticals and Radius Health.

Esperion Therapeutics is a US pharmaceutical company. The company's drug candidate, bempedoic acid, is a tablet that lowers LDL (low-density lipoprotein) cholesterol, either as a monotherapy or as a combination treatment. The US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) is expected to approve bempedoic acid by the end of February next year. Interest in companies specialising in cardiovascular disease has increased significantly as a result of the successes of several other companies in the field. Amarin, for one, has demonstrated very strong risk reduction data for its product which reduces the risk of cardiovascular mortality by lowering triglycerides in the blood, and Novartis' recently acquired Medicines Company has also developed a drug for the treatment of high cholesterol. Esperion's share price rose on this news during the period.

Novocure is a US medical technology company that has developed a novel therapy for treating cancer that uses electric fields tuned to specific frequencies to disrupt cell division and thus inhibit tumour growth. The company's therapy is approved for the treatment of glioblastoma (an aggressive form of brain tumour) and mesothelioma (an aggressive form of lung cancer). Novocure stock soared during the month, partly as a result of the company's third-quarter report in which it posted its first quarter of positive earnings, and partly because investors have started positioning themselves ahead of the interim read-outs next year in further indications.

Aerie Pharmaceuticals is a US pharmaceutical company specialising in eye diseases. In a short time, the company has launched two drugs that offer an innovative method for treating intraocular pressure (an elevated pressure in the eye). Rhopressa contains an active substance that can be combined with traditional eye drops based on prostaglandin analogues. Rocklatan is a ready-to-use combination of Rhopressa and latanoprost (a generic prostaglandin analogue). The two products make it possible to customise the treatment individually according to each patient's eye pressure. Despite a highly positive reception by the medical profession, the launch has been slower than expected due to protracted price negotiations in the various US states. The company thus lowered its full-year sales outlook in connection with its interim report for the third quarter, which sent the share price down in November.

Radius Health is a US pharmaceutical company. The majority of the company's revenue comes from Tymlos, a product for the treatment of osteoporosis. Tymlos has consistently increased its market share since its launch in 2017, and the product currently has a market share of roughly 40 percent. The weak share price trend in November was due to a delay in the company's new formulation that will allow patients to apply the active substance in Tymlos via a wearable patch. Patient enrolment for the Phase 3 study, necessary for obtaining approval, has also been slower than expected, which means that the launch will be postponed until 2023.

OUTLOOK

We are approaching 2020 and an election year in the United States. Election years tend to be good years for the stock market. There are also usually tailwinds too, that is, stocks usually climb higher after an election. It is likely that this phenomenon will repeat itself next year. If a trade agreement between the United States and China materialises in the near future, and if Joe Biden gets nominated at the Democratic Convention and becomes a presidential candidate, it could mean significant tailwinds even before the election – not only in US markets but in worldwide financial markets. A win for Elizabeth Warren, on the other hand, could cause great concern, as some of her proposals might be viewed as leaning towards the radical left. However, such a scenario is unlikely. A recession is not very likely either, but cannot definitely be excluded. On the whole, we see a volatile year ahead of us which still has decent potential to generate positive returns in line with the fund's return objective. The downside lies in a worsening economic climate, and the upside lies in trade agreements as well as a victory for a moderate presidential candidate.
