Monthly update

Positive stock market performance continued in the last month of the year and 2019 proved to be the best trading year since 2013. There were several reasons for this. A series of political developments eased fears, interest rates remained low and economic data indicated the potential for a good 2020. In addition, returns in euros or dollars were a half to two percentage points higher than in krona as a result of the further strengthening of the Swedish krona.

The difference between the fourth quarter of 2019 and the previous year's corresponding period was thus huge. At the beginning of the last quarter of 2018, investors had a high market exposure. They were concerned over the risk that an escalating trade war could lead to sharply falling profits. This led to extensive sell-offs. By contrast, the situation in autumn 2019 was largely the opposite, with relatively low equity exposure. As several clouds of concern dissipated, many investors were driven to take more risk.

One such cloud of concern was the British general election and, in particular, the fears that the Labour Party would gain greater political support. However, the Tories won their biggest victory since the days of Margaret Thatcher. Later in the month, the British Parliament was able to vote through Boris Johnson's Brexit proposal.

Another concern was over the news feeds on the partial trade deal between the United States and China. After several rounds of negotiations in the autumn, both sides announced that they had reached a deal which they expect to sign in January.

In the United States, the Democrats continued to push for impeachment proceedings against President Trump in response to his contacts with, and alleged pressure on, Ukraine. Although this received much attention domestically, the impact on capital markets was extremely limited.

Overall, the world index measured in euros rose by 1.4 percent in December. As earlier in the autumn, the spread between the best and worst sectors was wide. Energy and information technology companies posted significant gains while consumer staples and industrial companies fell, with healthcare ending the month in line with the world index. Geographically the spread was also extensive, with Hong Kong by far the top market and Japan showing a decline.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased 5.1 percent, measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR), and increased 4.7 percent measured in RC1 (SEK). For the full year 2019, the fund increased 40.1 percent measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR) and 44.1 percent measured in RC1 (SEK). 2019 thus was the fund's third best year since inception, measured in its main share class (EUR). This was due, among other reasons, to the purchase of (or bids for) eight of the fund's holdings, several positive study results from some of the fund's biotechnology holdings, the strong sales and earnings performance of holdings in the pharmaceutical subsector, positive individual events for medical technology holdings, and a strong share price recovery for the major service companies during the last quarter of 2019.

The month's best contributors to the fund were Intra-Cellular Therapies and Dermira. The worst contributors were Novocure and Abiomed. Intra-Cellular Therapies is a US pharmaceutical company that develops innovative drugs for the treatment of central nervous system (CNS) disorders. The company's product lumateperone targets three different neurotransmitters, all of which are involved in mental illness and therefore have potential in a number of indications. In addition to the schizophrenia indication, the company is studying the effect of lumateperone in bipolar disorder, dementia-related depression and Alzheimer's disease. After several setbacks earlier in 2019, expectations for the product's US approval in schizophrenia were low. However, the announcement that the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approved lumateperone earlier than expected and with favourable label sent the stock soaring to more than double its value in December.

Dermira is a US biotechnology company specialising in skin diseases. The company's asset with the greatest potential value is the drug candidate lebrikizumab, a so-called IL-13 inhibitor developed for the treatment of atopic dermatitis. In Phase 2b studies, lebrikizumab has demonstrated effects similar to the drug dupilumab, a so-called IL-4 inhibitor, but with a potentially improved side-effect profile. The market potential for atopic dermatitis is considered significant. The developers of dupilumab, Sanofi and Regeneron, aim to achieve sales of at least 10 billion euros for the drug. The reason for Dermira's strong price performance in December was the announcement that the FDA had granted lebrikizumab so-called 'fast track' approval which shortens the review period from 10 to 6 months and can lead to a faster launch.

Novocure is a US medical device company that has developed a novel therapy to treat cancer. The therapy uses electric fields tuned to specific frequencies to disrupt cell division and thus inhibit tumour growth. The company's technology is approved for the treatment of glioblastoma (an aggressive form of brain tumour) and mesothelioma (an aggressive form of lung cancer). In addition to these approvals, the company is conducting several studies into additional cancer indications. Novocure stock soared by more than 150 percent during the year, making it the fund's best contributor in 2019 even though the stock had a negative performance during the last month of the year.

The US medical technology company Abiomed was one of the month's worst contributors. The company's product Impella, a minimally invasive cardiac pump, is world-leading in improving blood circulation when the patient's cardiac function is impaired for various reasons. The technology behind Impella is unique and its area of application looks to be extensive. Accordingly, there is continued high untapped potential for the product. The uniqueness of the product and its dominant market position are crucial for the fund's long-term holdings. The company's sales have accelerated rapidly over a long period as acceptance and the use of Impella has grown. In 2019, however, the company faced some resistance from the physicians that led to a slower increase in sales. This resistance can be largely explained by a lack of educational efforts on the part of the company. The share price fell progressively during the year, making the fund's holdings in Abiomed the worst contributor overall in 2019.

OUTLOOK

2019 turned out to be a boom year after a tough 2018. However, it may be worth reminding ourselves that the average for both years exceeded our 12% rate of return requirement by only a few percentage points. Since its inception the fund has had an annualised return of nearly 20 percent, which is among the best rates of return in the world for hedge funds within the healthcare sector. These returns are due to a high net exposure paired with good stock selections in biotechnology and medical technology. Our Scientific Advisory Board has also enabled a long-term approach to fund management together with a sharp focus on advances in medical research.

We approach 2020 with moderate expectations. We take a somewhat cautious stance in our assessment of 2020 for several reasons; it is election year in the United States; we have a very strong period behind us; there are growing geopolitical concerns and macroeconomic policy is generally difficult to assess; and growth is declining in several major economies. We believe that 2020 is likely to be back-end loaded (most of the return generated in the latter part of the year). Our sector therefore needs to consolidate the rising share prices of the past year and receive confirmation that Trump will face Biden after the Democratic Convention this summer. Somewhat higher volatility in the sector, however, should not be a deterrent. The sector remains attractively valued, and the pharmaceutical and biotechnology industry has attained a new, slightly higher level of productivity in terms of new product development. Going forward, we see an exciting year ahead of us. There is every reason to continue our management activities under the motto "Keep Calm and Carry On".
