MONTHLY UPDATE

The new decade began as the old one had finished; with major market gains, particularly in growth sectors. The first two weeks of January saw significant inflows to equity markets since investors were hopeful that economic development, and thus corporate earnings growth, would improve in 2020. As a result, the positive outlook on equities that marked the last quarter of 2019 was bolstered due to positive flows following several quarters of sell-offs.

Reasons for this optimism included improved economic data from the major economies, progress in the US-China trade negotiations and the UK's orderly withdrawal from the EU.

Virus outbreak in China impacted the markets

In the middle of the month, however, an unexpected problem emerged as reports started coming from China about a viral outbreak in Hubei Province. Soon after, the coronavirus came to dominate the headlines. The number of infected people increased rapidly and although mortality was relatively low compared with the SARS virus, Chinese authorities took urgent action. Chinese New Year holiday celebrations were extended, travel bans were introduced and several airlines cancelled their flights to China.

The fact that one of the world's biggest economies was put on hold, with the inevitable negative effects on growth at least for the short term, caused a sharp decline in investor risk appetite. Most sectors in which China is a major buyer, such as metals and oil, were hit especially hard. For example, the price of oil fell by just over 15 percent within a few weeks.

World index up in January

However, thanks to the substantial gains for growth stocks, especially in the United States, combined with a strengthening of the dollar, the world index increased by 0.1 percent in January, measured in euros. The spread between the best and the worst sectors remained substantial. Utilities and information technology noted the biggest gains by far, while energy and commodity companies fell. Geographically too, the spread was great, with the NASDAQ and S&P 500 firmly on the plus side while Hong Kong showed a bigger decline.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund decreased by 4.2 percent, measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR), and by 2.7 percent measured in RC1 (SEK). Following the sharp rise in the biotechnology sector in the fourth quarter 2019, when the Nasdaq Biotech Index (NBI) rose 17.6 percent measured in euros, the subsector initially continued its positive performance in early January. However, the lack of merger and acquisition news as well as the growing concern over the impact of the new virus in China on the world economy, sent share prices down and the biotechnology sector ended down by 4.4 percent.

The month's best contributors for the fund were Acceleron Pharma and Dermira. The worst contributors were Intra-Cellular Therapies and Mirati Therapeutics.

Acceleron Pharma rose after successful phase II study

Acceleron Pharma is a US biotechnology company whose research focuses on a protein family called TGF-beta. TGF-beta plays an important role in cell growth and repair mechanisms, and is involved in several different medical conditions. The company's product, luspatercept, is approved by the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) for the treatment of anemia (dysfunctional red blood cells) in beta-thalassemia.

In January, the company announced positive results from a phase II study with another of its drug candidates. Sotatercept is given, in addition to standard treatment, to patients with pulmonary arterial hypertension (PAH), which is high blood pressure in the arteries of the lungs. The study showed clinically relevant and statistically significant improvements compared with standard treatment alone. The product has notable market potential, and this was reflected in its share price which was up over 70 percent in January.

Dermira continues up after bid

Dermira is a US biotechnology company specialising in skin diseases. The company has developed lebrikizumab, a so-called IL-13 inhibitor, for the treatment of atopic dermatitis. The holding in Dermira was one of the fund's best contributors last December, thanks to the so-called Fast Track designation which the FDA granted for lebrikizumab.

In early January, Eli Lilly made a bid for Dermira worth 1.1 billion US dollars, sending its share price up even more. The premium, however, was limited because the share had already tripled in three months.

Intra-Cellular Therapies fell after profit-taking and short selling

Intra-Cellular Therapies is a US pharmaceutical company that develops innovative drugs for the treatment of central nervous system (CNS) disorders. The company's product, lumateperone, targets three different neurotransmitters, all of which are involved in mental illness, and therefore has potential in several indications. In addition to the schizophrenia indication, the company is studying the effect of lumateperone in bipolar disorder, dementia-related depression and Alzheimer's disease.

In December, the announcement that the FDA had approved lumateperone earlier than expected and with favourable prescribing information, sent the stock soaring to more than double its value. However, the highly positive share price development led to profit-taking and a significant increase in short-selling positions in the stock, sending its price back down sharply in January.

Mirati Therapeutics plummeted after missed bid

Mirati Therapeutics is a US biotechnology company that develops targeted cancer therapies. The company's research on mutations in the KRAS gene generated great interest during the autumn, with Mirati and Amgen leading the race with their respective projects. Early studies showed possible synergistic effects in combination therapy with KRAS inhibitors and a PD-L1 inhibitor, which led to speculations about a possible takeover of Mirati.

The disappointment was therefore great when, in early January, Merck chose instead to enter into a collaboration with the Japanese pharmaceutical companies, Taiho and Otsuka, to develop a KRAS inhibitor. Consequently, share price development for Mirati was one of the worst in the portfolio during the month.

OUTLOOK

After a stellar year in 2019, it is important to have realistic expectations for 2020, which will be dominated by the US elections and the impact of the coronavirus on economic growth, not least in China.

High-risk appetite in the stock market despite the virus

Clearly, high-risk appetite is looming in the stock market – a market that has the ability to deliver significant gains based on healthy corporate and supportive macro news and thereby lending support to the idea that any disruption in growth caused by the virus epidemic will only be temporary.

We optimistically await the results of the US election and the development of the virus

Should the Democrats choose a moderate presidential candidate at their convention in Wisconsin in mid-July, this will benefit the stock market in general and the health sector in particular. However, we are choosing a somewhat more cautious strategy for the fund at the beginning of this year compared with 2019. Our optimistic view of underlying growth in the healthcare sector remains unchanged. But, as we mentioned earlier, returns are likely to come in the second half of the year when both the election and the virus will be somewhat easier to assess.
