MONTHLY UPDATE

The theme which dominated in June was the risk of a worsening economic climate and, with that, a negative impact on corporate profits. The weak month meant that, overall, the first half of the year was the worst for world stock markets in decades. During the half-year period, the S&P500 fell more than it had in over 50 years (since 1970 in fact) and the technology-heavy Nasdaq fell more than it had in the last 20 years (since 2002). A stronger dollar made this extra noticeable for investors with the dollar as their base currency.

Interest rate hikes created concern

Rapid, sharp interest rate hikes from central banks, with US Federal Reserve at the helm, caused concern that they would lead to an economic downturn. Many believed that the stated ambition to fight inflation could lead not only to a widespread slowdown in the economy, but, in the long run, also to an easier monetary policy. Additionally, the inflationary pressures led to widespread expressions of dissatisfaction which resulted in several labor market conflicts, not least within the transport sector in Europe.

The weakened economic outlook created concern that corporate profit expectations are too optimistic. Despite the slowdown in the economy, profit forecasts have not been adjusted down and investors became worried both concerning second quarter reports and not least the outlook for the rest of 2022.

The world's energy supply in continued focus

Developments in energy markets continued to create headlines. After successively shutting off the gas supply to several European countries during the spring, Russia decreased deliveries to Germany in June, which also affected Austria and Switzerland as Germany to a large extent reexports gas to them. As a result, electricity prices remained at very high levels and made discussions of rationing increasingly relevant.

At the same time, President Biden sought to influence both US companies and countries such as Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates to increase oil production in an attempt to counteract price increases. This, however, proved difficult due to long-term underinvestment in capacity.

IC1 (EUR) -12.73%

The world index noted significant decline in June

Concerns over inflation, recession risks and the effects of the war in Ukraine all had a major negative impact on investors' willingness to take risks. Despite a certain recovery during the latter part of the month, world indices recorded a significant decline in June, albeit with differences between sectors and regions. Most sectors, with energy companies at the forefront, fell back. In terms of the larger stock exchanges, Hong Kong was the only one to note gains while the US and Europe experienced significant declines.

FUND PERFORMANCE

In June, the fund increased by 2.3 % in its main class IC1 (EUR). Small and medium-sized biotechnology companies saw a strong recovery during June, which contributed to the performance of the fund's holdings in that sub-sector. Pharmaceuticals and digital healthcare solutions also made a positive contribution to the fund's return while medical technology and service contributed negatively. The major pharmaceutical companies continued to benefit from the uncertain macroeconomic outlook as investors expect lower volatility in earnings for this sub-sector.

The best contributors of the month were Mirati Therapeutics and Alnylam Therapeutics. The worst contributors were Tenet Healthcare and Horizon Therapeutics.

Mirati Therapeutics increased after a successful Phase II study

Mirati Therapeutics is an American biotechnology company developing targeted cancer therapies. The company's most advanced drug candidate, adagrasib, is a so-called KRAS inhibitor. KRAS mutations are among the most common mutations in cancer patients. Adagrasib has shown positive results in non-small cell lung cancer, colorectal cancer and pancreatic cancer. Earlier this year the company applied for an approval in lung cancer to the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA). Like many other biotechnology companies, Mirati has seen its share price more than halved in the past year. In June the company presented initial data from a phase II study in lung cancer patients with a combination of adagrasib and Keytruda, Merck's PD-1 inhibitor. This study showed a high response rate, especially in patients with a high PD-L1 expression. The combination of adagrasib with Keytruda as the first line treatment could considerably increase adagrasib's market potential. The share increased by just over 70% and thus became the fund's best contributor in June.

Alnylam Therapeutics, with three already launched products, benefited from the rise in the sector

Alnylam Therapeutics is an American biotechnology company developing new drugs based on RNA interference. The discovery of RNA interference, where double-stranded RNA can regulate gene expression, was rewarded with the Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine in 2006. Alnylam has successfully developed three drugs all based on the principle of regulating gene expression: (1) Onpattro which is used in the treatment of hereditary amyloidosis, a disease that, among other things, leads to heart failure: (2) Givlari used in the treatment of acute hepatic porphyria, a condition in which deficiency of an enzyme affects liver function and: (3) Oxlumo used for primary hyperoxaluria type 1, a severe form of kidney stones. The company has a broad, balanced research portfolio which includes extending the scope of existing products as well as new drug candidates for, for instance, high cholesterol, hemophilia and high blood pressure. With three products already launched on the market and a strong balance sheet, Alnylam's share price has performed relatively better than many other biotechnology companies. The strong recovery for the sector in June also benefited Alnylam and the stock contributed positively to the fund.

Tenet Healthcare fell after a competitor's profit warning

Tenet Healthcare is a diversified US healthcare provider. The company operates acute hospitals and surgical centers as well as provides RCM-services across the US. Public hospital companies' stocks in the US all struggled during the first half of the year. As the pandemic subsided patient volumes decreased, which affected profitability for these companies. During the first half of the year, the hospitals were not able to compensate for these losses in volume with deferred care to the same extent as earlier during the pandemic. The buoyant labor market was the cause of another problem for hospitals. High wage inflation coupled with a structural deficit in healthcare staff, not least nurses, further affected profitability negatively. Tenet generates about 50% of its profit from sources other than acute hospital operations. This diversification served the company well during the first quarter. Tenet is now trading at a multiple that is below the pandemic bottom in March 2020 even though the company has developed very strongly operationally in the last two years. When one of Tenet's competitors issued a profit warning at the end of the month, it caused hospital companies to fall on the stock market.

Uncertainty around Horizon Therapeutics' Phase III study

Horizon Therapeutics is an American pharmaceutical company focusing on rare diseases. The company's revenue primarily comes from Krystexxa for the treatment of refractory gout and Tepezza which is an IGF-1R inhibitor for the treatment of TED (Thyroid Eye Disease) caused by increased thyroid hormone. Both products have a strong growth profile driven by a significant medical need and a lack of alternative treatment methods. Tepezza's turnover reached $1.7 billion last year which meant a growth rate of just over 100%. During 2022 the product sales is expected to grow by 35%. The long-term growth of the product is however dependent on its use in patients with chronic TED. The result from the ongoing Phase III study in this patient population is likely to be an important catalyst for the stock price recovery.

OUTLOOK

In June, there was finally a slight turnaround for the fund. We note a positive development associated with falling long-term interest rates and falling inflation expectations in the medium term.

Two important factors complicate the outlook

However, in the short term, we have two very important factors to take into account which could complicate our slightly more positive attitude. The first is that the reporting season for the second quarter may result in negative adjustments to corporate forecasts following weaker demand and rising costs. The second is that a prolonged war in Ukraine could lead to an energy crisis during the coming winter. Russia may significantly lower its oil production (which would reduce the total global supply) and impose further restrictions on deliveries on natural gas to Europe during the fall. If this were to happen, rising stock markets would be rather unlikely.

Uncertain geopolitical times require continued caution

Despite the good prospects for a better stock market in the short term, it is, unfortunately, not prudent to significantly increase the fund's exposure to equities at this time. Admittedly, our sector is doing better than most since cost pressure is less onerous and demand is relatively stable in most of the companies in which the fund is a shareholder. We do, however, live in highly uncertain times geopolitically. Going forward, we will continue our relentless work to find a reasonable balance between the sector's best opportunities and the high level of global uncertainty we are currently living in.
