MONTHLY UPDATE

After the first half year that was the worst in decades, world markets rallied strongly in July. Not since the breakthrough for Covid vaccines in November 2020 was the uptick greater in a single month. This was despite continued high inflation, interest rate hikes from central banks, soaring energy prices in Europe, sluggish corporate profits and no end in sight for the war in Ukraine.

The reason for the strong markets was probably the pessimistic sentiment among investors during the winter and spring which resulted in a risk asset exposure that was the lowest in many years. Earnings reports for the second quarter confirmed a slowdown in demand but were still not as weak as had been feared.

Inflation in continued focus

The fight against inflation continued to take center stage in July. The US Federal Reserve's increase in its benchmark interest rate was the largest in decades and the market is now waiting for the ECB to tighten its monetary policy. Thus, the discussion about the slowdown of interest rate hikes in the near future continues as the intended slowdown in the economy becomes more apparent.

New realities for Biden's reform package

Perhaps to bolster the Democratic Party ahead of the US midterm elections in November, conservative Democratic Senator Joe Manchin suddenly pivoted and announced his support of the Biden administration's major reform package. Manchin had been an outspoken opponent of the reforms, which he believed would drive inflation. The package, which includes corporate tax increases, continued to be criticized by Republicans.

Vladimir Putin's cat-and-mouse game with European energy supplies was stepped up in July. After being closed for maintenance, the critical Nord Stream 1 pipeline reopened only to be immediately shut down again due to "technical problems". EU leaders came to an agreement on a voluntary reduction in gas consumption, which, however, was immediately questioned by those countries not directly dependent on Russia for their gas supplies. Unity within the EU was thus, once again, put to the test.

A strong month for world markets

After a shaky start to the month, world indices recorded a sharp increase in July. The many concerns about inflation, recession risks and the effects of the war in Ukraine, which had a major negative impact in early summer, seemed to have vanished.

World indices thus rose and all sectors recorded gains. Growth stocks performed best with information technology and consumer discretionary leading the pack, while healthcare and consumer staples lagged behind. In terms of regions, US markets were the top performers. The only major stock market that fell was Hong Kong.

FUND PERFORMANCE

In July, the fund increased by 8.7 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). The healthcare sector also benefited from the increased risk appetite among investors during the month. In addition, individual holdings were affected by earnings from the ongoing reporting season. Many service and medical technology companies were and still are being impacted by the post-pandemic recovery, with staff shortages and wage inflation partly holding back growth and improvements in margins. The strengthening of the US dollar has hit US multinationals hard and was a major factor for the downwardly revised sales forecasts for the rest of the year.

All subsectors contributed positively to returns during the month with the strongest price developments in the service sector, partly thanks to Amazon's bid for primary care company One Medical. The best contributors of the month were Tenet Healthcare and Abiomed. The worst contributors were Abbvie and Alkermes.

Tenet Healthcare's report exceeded expectations

US healthcare provider Tenet Healthcare was one of the month's top contributors for the fund. The company operates hospitals and surgery centers throughout the US and offers revenue cycle management to healthcare providers. During the month, Tenet issued a report that exceeded market expectations. Tenet's diversified portfolio, with about 50 percent of profits coming from non-hospital operations, enabled strong earnings despite a tough operating environment. Tenet for the most part maintained its outlook for the full year despite high labor costs and volume losses due to a slowing pandemic.

We continue to believe that Tenet's valuation looks attractive given the company's growth prospects, balance sheet position and its expanded strategic focus on acute surgery centers.

Abiomed's technology paves the way for a large potential market

The US medical device company Abiomed was one of the fund's best contributors in July. The company's product Impella, a minimally invasive heart pump, is a leader in improving blood circulation when the patient's heart function is impaired for various reasons. The technology behind Impella is unique and its area of use is considered to be extensive. This means that there is significant untapped potential for the company's technology. Abiomed has experienced substantial growth with increased acceptance of Impella by treating physicians. In July, medical technology stocks benefited from an improved investor sentiment, which also had a positive impact on Abiomed's share price.

Loss of market exclusivity put pressure on Abbvie
Abbvie is a multinational US pharmaceutical company. The future of its successful drug Humira, which is approved to treat various inflammatory diseases, has been causing concern among investors since the product will lose its market exclusivity over the next year. Yet in a relatively short time, Abbvie has managed to launch two new successful products that in the long run will replace a large part of the revenues which Humira currently accounts for. The aesthetics business including Botox and fillers, a legacy from its acquisition of Allergan, is showing strong growth and is providing a good diversification of the product portfolio. For some time, the impending phase-out of Humira has resulted in a low relative valuation for the stock. The low valuation, together with a dividend yield of nearly four percent, makes the stock an attractive investment in the uncertain macro environment ahead of us this fall.

Alkermes's sales figures fell short of expectations

Alkermes is a US pharmaceutical company that has succeeded in improving the clinical profile of a number of previously approved antipsychotic drugs through its various platforms for innovative drug formulations

Lybalvi, a combination therapy for schizophrenia and bipolar disorder, was launched in late 2021, and market expectations for this product's sales growth have been an important factor behind this year's stock performance. However, second-quarter sales did not fully meet market expectations, sending the share price down.

OUTLOOK

Even though a long-awaited stock market rally finally broke the downward trend, it should primarily be considered as a rebound from oversold territories. The journey forward is quite uncertain due to geopolitical risks. These risks - the war in Ukraine, China's increasingly vocal and categorical claims to Taiwan and Covid lockdowns in China - are leaving their mark on the macro environment in the form of high energy prices, disappointing consumer demand, logistical struggles and component shortages, which are being translated into higher interest rates and inflation. The risk of a mild form of stagflation – low growth in economy with persistently high inflation - is palpable.

We continue to remain somewhat cautious in terms of equity exposure and stock selection. The apparent renewed interest in medical technology and biotechnology could turn sour if the risk of recession increases. As best we can, we endeavor to select stocks that should weather a recession even though the fund has fairly substantial holdings in growth stocks, where the risk of decline lies primarily in the valuation of the profits rather than the profits themselves.

Increased political activity in the US this fall

We are heading toward increased political activity as midterm elections in the United States approach and, prior to that, an ever more likely Medicare drug reform bill. We will provide more details about the reform's consequences when enacted. But according to Congress' own assessment, it will provide savings of about 29 billion US dollars annually once it is implemented in a few years. This corresponds to an estimated two percent of the size of the world market. In our opinion, the sector should not recoil in the face of such a modest reform. But, as we have previously mentioned, the devil is in the details and the details can change. The experts now assess the probability of a drug reform taking place as being quite high. A definitive cap of 2,000 dollars on drug costs per retiree has been long awaited by everyone and could help more people be able to afford their prescription drugs. Although no government price regulation is on the table, the price of older blockbuster drugs should be able to be negotiated down, with mandatory minimum rebates that would increase over time if industry price competition is not at hand. A restriction on annual price increases will be introduced, but in the long run this would likely be offset by higher launch prices. Biotechnology products (drugs that are injected) would appear to have more favorable rules than traditional drugs (in tablet form) in order to protect the smaller biotech companies (which are primarily working with injectables), something the big companies find discriminatory and which, they argue, would also provide wrong incentives for research throughout the sector.

We can say, admittedly with a hint of relief, that secondquarter reports, most of which have now been released, were relatively good. This offers us good prospects for the second half of the year, when healthcare and the economy will hopefully continue to normalize. In our assessment, the pandemic will be manageable for most of our companies even if healthcare systems were to face increasing pressure during the coming winter. Vaccine and drug manufacturers are also expected to encounter another season of strong demand.
