MONTHLY UPDATE

The end of the rate hiking cycle and rallies in both equities and bonds! After three dismal months where investors fretted about rising bond yields, uncertainty over inflation and/or recession, and the geopolitical situation, sentiment positioning was at a year low at the end of October. In November, however, all these concerns seemed to dissipate and markets rallied. Global stocks posted the best monthly return in two years. Also, following an almost three-year stretch of falling returns, bonds again attracted investors and yields fell significantly, making for the best month since the fall of 2008. Aggregated, cross asset risk appetite rose to its highest level in two years.

Decisions interpreted as the end of the hiking cycle

Central banks in the US and Europe refrained from increasing their interest rates and conveyed the message that inflation was trending down, and that they expected to reach the targets before too long. Even though some central bankers warned that the fight against inflation was not over, the decisions were interpreted not only as the end of the hiking cycle of the last two years but also that rates would be cut in 2024.

However, investment bank strategists continued to be divided about what to expect of earnings growth next year as falling inflation and subsequent rate cuts could portend weaker demand and profit margin pressure.

A temporary truce

Following the Hamas terrorist attack in October, the Israeli response by invading the northern parts of the Gaza strip continued relentlessly in November. The forceful Israeli actions, aimed at once and for all eliminating the threat that Hamas poses, led to widespread demonstrations in many countries. The initial sympathy for Israel following the attack changed into protests in favor of the Palestinians, showing the polarized view of the situation in the region. A truce between Israel and Hamas for some days was reached, mediated by Qatar, resulting in the exchange of hostages against imprisoned Palestinians.

Energy market in focus

The energy market continued to be in focus in November. As the war in the Middle East erupted, oil prices rose as traders saw a possible escalation throughout the region. Efforts by the major powers to confine the conflict, for example Saudi Arabia's pledge to invest in Iran, dampened those fears. Instead, the prospect of increased production in countries like Iran and Venezuela combined with lower demand made prices fall throughout November.

Campaigns ramping up in the US

With the US presidential election less than a year away, the temperature rose in both parties. Among the Democrats some voices argued that the elderly Joe Biden should not run again, while some Republicans began promoting Nikki Haley as a contender to Donald Trump.

World index up

The world index increased significantly in November as oversold conditions were reversed. Significant FX changes, not least the weakening of the US dollar, meant that returns differed depending on the base currency. Information technology and consumer discretionary led the advance while consumer staples and energy lagged. Looking at the regions, the US outperformed Europe and Japan, while Hong Kong fell.

FUND PERFORMANCE

In November, the fund increased by 7.1 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). All sub-sectors made positive contributions, but the fund's holdings in biotechnology and medical technology were particularly strong. A major highlight of the fund's performance was the strategic acquisition move by AbbVie who made an offer to acquire Immunogen for an equity value of USD 10 billion. The best contributors were Immunogen and Natera. The worst contributors were Shockwave and Humana.

Immunogen to be acquired by AbbVie

Immunogen's Elahere, for ovarian cancer, is a breakthrough treatment within cancer care. Elahere's uptake has steadily increased since launch and the company has been a takeover candidate for some time. In November, AbbVie announced the acquisition of Immunogen to bolster its oncology portfolio. The price represented a significant premium to the current share price and Immunogen's stock rose by around 90 percent in November.

Sentiment and positive earnings positively impacted Natera

The genetic testing company, Natera, specializes in the analysis of DNA in order to offer insights into reproductive health, oncology and organ transplantation. Recently they reported robust earnings, indicated strong utilization among physicians and increased average selling prices for their flagship product, Signatera. While the company has shown solid fundamentals and positive updates on the oncology volumes, the share price performance has been volatile during the year. The company's stock surged by over 40 percent in November.

Tough month for Shockwave Medical

Shockwave Medical, a pioneer in intravascular lithotripsy (IVL) for atherosclerotic plaque treatment, offers a unique solution for conditions where there is a lack of treatment alternatives. Their technology is based on a sound-wave mechanism similar to that which has already been used for decades to break up kidney stones. IVL combines the sound pressure waves with balloon dilation to break down plaque in the vessel wall without damaging the surrounding soft tissue. The company's recent earnings report, however, highlighted a challenge; the impact from prior authorization requirement from one of the major private payors, which had a negative impact during the quarter. This announcement caused the stock to decline approximately 15 percent during the month.

Humana rumored to be taken out – stock sees pressure

Humana is the second largest Medicare managed-care company in the US. During the month, Cigna Group was rumored to be interested in acquiring Humana. The companies have still not commented on the rumors and only limited financial information regarding the structure of a potential deal is available. A merged company would be worth around 150 billion dollars, making it a health insurance giant. It is not possible to rule out an outright acquisition or a merger of equals, which, combined with the financing structure, would have significant implications for the valuation of Humana's equity. Humana's stock came under pressure due to the uncertainty surrounding the financing structure and the fact that previous similar deals in the sector have faced challenges in passing antitrust reviews, putting the stocks in "deal purgatory" for 12-18 months.

OUTLOOK

The period of interest rate hikes by central banks should now be over in both the US and Europe. US 10-year yields fell by 0.6 percent in the US during November; such a large decline is rarely seen in a single month. Stocks rose significantly as the financial tightening in the economy eased as a result of rising bond values. The present value of discounted stock dividends rises with falling interest rates, which gives further support for higher stock prices.

Volatility to be expected

We see clear signs of a turnaround for growth stocks, large as well as small- and midcaps. Even shares in companies that are not yet profitable will receive some support because the stock market anticipates that the possibility of financing future operations may improve in the coming year. There are many indications that the strong month of November could continue. However, we should be prepared for more volatility if the market interprets that the real economy is losing momentum, or that inflation in the coming months will not drop significantly. We make the optimistic assessment that the strong market may well continue. So far, we assess the risk of a recession in the US as low and inflation should continue to fall, albeit at a slower pace. The fund's large and medium-sized quality companies should continue to be rewarded in a rising market, as it is the so-called generalist investors who have the greatest resources to increase their exposure to the healthcare sector.
