SUMMARY

During October, the focus was initially on the earnings season where financials performed well. However, the high degree of uncertainty surrounding the election in the US increasingly led to heightened market volatility, where both sectors and individual stocks were affected by the polls. There were significant differences in currencies as the dollar strengthened against the euro. Geopolitical tensions continued during the month, however without any major impact on the market. October was a tough month for the healthcare sector, especially for the healthcare services sub-sector.

MONTHLY COMMENT

October was marked by a gradual shift in sentiment. Initially, the US labor market accelerated, supporting a soft landing. The 50 basis point rate cut added fuel to interest-sensitive equities. The stock market seemed little influenced by election outcome speculation, geopolitical turmoil or hurricane Milton. Rather, stronger emphasis was put on third quarter earnings. Here, financials performed well. Inflation largely remained in check, and at month close the market priced in a high probability of a 25 basis point rate cut at the next Fed meeting.

However, as an uncertain US election outcome came in focus, market volatility increased, reflecting a growing risk-off sentiment. Increased caution leading up to an election has been a recurring theme and hardly came as a surprise. Sectors and single stocks were increasingly categorized as winners or losers depending on election outcomes. The same categorization was also seen in healthcare, most notably within hospitals and managed care. The world index and S&P 500 were both down by 2.0 percent and 1.0 percent respectively, measured in US dollars. However, the performance varies significantly depending on investors' base currency. In October the US dollar strengthened by more than 2 percent against the Euro.

The finish line draws near for the US election

It may take several days to reach an outcome, particularly regarding the division of power between the White House and the two Chambers of Congress. The October polls indicated a somewhat favorable momentum for Trump given an advantage in the swing state Pennsylvania. However, the race remained very close and polling results were well within the margin of error. A similar pattern was also true for the other six swing states likely to sway the result in either candidate's favor. As for the Senate, the Republicans appeared to have an edge whereas the House remained more uncertain. To add further uncertainty, all the polls struggled with the issue of accurate representation given the low number of survey respondents.

Geopolitical tensions and focus on internal markets

Stock markets were little impacted by the multiple ongoing major conflicts, apart from the Israel-Iran conflict which posed risks to oil supply that were difficult to fully assess. Deglobalization themes resurfaced, as exemplified by Trump's campaign to impose significant additional tariffs on goods. Similarly, the EU imposed duties on Chinese electric vehicles. China continued initiatives to revive its national economy with a lessened priority for increased imports.

FUND PERFORMANCE

In October, the fund decreased by 4.6 percent in the main share class IC1 (EUR). The increased risk aversion had a negative effect on the healthcare sector. Medical technology and biotechnology were positive contributors while all other subsectors detracted from performance.

The top contributors were Procept and Intra-Cellular Therapies. The worst contributors were Regeneron and Elevance.

Strong sales figures for Procept's new robot Hydros

Procept is a medical technology company specializing in urology and has developed a surgical robotic system, the first and only image-guided automatic robotic platform of its kind. The system uses a controlled water jet to treat benign prostatic hyperplasia patients. Procept aims to reduce side effects and enhance safety and efficacy with this approach. Even though it is still early days, they have recently shown increased utilization and greater adoption. Following the FDA clearance in August for its new system called Hydros, Procept announced its third quarter earnings at the end of October. They reported revenue growth that exceeded expectations in both US and international markets. This performance boosted Procept's share price during the month.

Strong momentum for Intra-Cellular Therapies

The company delivered a strong earnings report during the month with the lead product, Caplyta, continuing its increased uptake in schizophrenia. Importantly, the company indicated a market potential of 5 billion US dollar for Caplyta, well above consensus estimates. This highlighted the lofty expectations for the drug's next indication, major depressive disorders. Here, the company expected registrational filing by year-end on the back of two positive Phase III trials. The share price was up as a consequence.

Pressure on high-dose Eylea caused Regeneron's stock to fall

Regeneron's high-dose (HD) formulation of blockbuster drug, Eylea, for age-related macular oedema is an important growth driver for the company. The company's continued success hinges on a conversion from standard dose Eylea to high dose HD Eylea. The drug was impacted by two events in October. Firstly, Regeneron's court filing to deny the early entry of Amgen's Eylea-biosimilar drug, Pavblu, was rejected. The upcoming launch of Pavblu poses a risk to the whole of Regeneron's Eylea business. Secondly, the conversion to HD Eylea as reported in the earnings report fell short of third quarter expectations.

Elevance Health fell after weak earnings

Elevance Health is a diversified managed care company. During the month, the company released an earnings report which came in below market expectations. The Medicaid segment especially underperformed, due to eligibility redeterminations impacting risk pools. Moreover, the company's initial expectations for earnings growth next year were tepid at best.

REFLECTIONS FROM THE MANAGERS

October was a difficult month for the healthcare sector and for the fund. From the fund's perspective, there were several events which could be interpreted as negative in the short term. Nevertheless, almost none of these events gave us reason to re-allocate in the portfolio. What seemed to be needed was a correction of expectations, and what we saw was short-term declines, with some expected positive developments being deferred to the future and/or that the risk/reward was seen as being less favorable. This type of situation is especially common during the fall, when the outline for the coming year is becoming clearer and more defined.

High level of political uncertainty

The election of a new US president and the likely shifts in the balance of power in Congress accentuated the sense of uncertainty. The level of political uncertainty is seen as being particularly high in this election. However, we know from history that the perception of risks often becomes magnified at times of elections. Many US election observers are tempted to provide forecasts of the political landscape we will see during the coming four years. However, this is often done without sufficient consideration being given to the fact that presidents do not always get a mandate to run policy which is based entirely on their own political agenda. It is easy for observers to underestimate or even overlook the dependence on the Congress, the many different interest groups within the parties, business stakeholders, trade partners and geopolitical adversaries. In fact, presidents on their own can accomplish relatively little. On top of that, there are only two years until the next (midterm) election.

Important issues that may arise for the incoming president include taxes, tariffs, support to Ukraine, the Mexican border, reshoring of industry/production, as well as the budgeting and detailed regulation of Medicare and Medicaid. Minorities within each party can cause unexpected twists in such budget negotiations.

Many realities will restrict the upcoming power constellation in Washington. The budget is unlikely to become much more expansive without pushing interest rates and thus worsening conditions for the economy. Neither can the US reduce NATO's resources, mandates or budget without diminishing its own geopolitical influence and long-term strategic ability in other parts of the world. This is hardly the ambition of either the Democrats or the Republicans. Major changes in discretionary spending on social programs are likely to be difficult to carry out in the near future since new methods for dimensioning spending supported by both parties would be needed. We therefore believe that there will be an evolution rather than a revolution when it comes to US politics, both when it comes to domestic and foreign policy. In such an environment, the healthcare sector should be able to get some "peace and quiet", however potential political initiatives could be cause for a degree of uncertainty. As we have mentioned many times before, we live in exciting times and a great deal of surprises can happen. Time will tell.
